ZONING QUESTION BEFORE COUNCIL

At the session of the City Council held last Monday night, City Councilman Henry Sunderman acted as City Clerk, in the absence of the City Clerk, who is on his vacation.

A resolution from the Daly City Merchants' Association, endorsing the Sneath ranch as the future San Francisco jail site was read and ordered filed.

A complaint was received, advising that a temporary shack, not up to building requirements, had been erected in Castle Gardens. As the building inspector is on his vacation, this matter was referred to the Chief of Police for immediate investigation.

Suggestions offered on the zoning question were referred to the ordinance committe for consideration.

The question of annexation of the Colma territory was laid over for two weeks. A committee from that section was present and will get together with the Council within the next week to discuss plans as to fire department, etc.

The health officer's report was read and ordered filed.

Nothing new has developed regardingthe Mission street widening. It has been promised by San Francisco and the state that a meeting will soon be called to decide on a definite plan.

LOCAL BOY SCOUTS TO ENJOY OUTING

The regular meeting of the Sub-Council, Boy Scouts of America, was held in the City Hall, August 4, and was attended by the following representatives of the various fraternal and civic organizations: A. J. Bodien, City Council; E. W. Norton, American Legion; L. January, American Legion; Charles Brown, Veteran Firemen; L. W. Johnson, Veterans of Foreign Wars; and W. Sunderland, Eagles.

It was decided to hold a dance on September 26 for the benefit of the local Boy Scout units. The committee was instructed to select an orchestra from Daly City, and to otherwise patronize the local merchants in the purchasing of supplies and printing.

The week end of August 22 and 23 was chosen for the overnight outing for the Boy Scouts and Cubs at Camp Snipe, where the boys expect to have an enjoyable time. This outing will be under the supervision of Scoutmaster Chester Smith, aided by his two able assistants, Al Brauns and W. Olsen.

The boys will take an active part in the American Legion parade and ceremonies to be held in Daly City this Friday evening, August 14.

NATIVE SON NOTES

The joint whist committee, working with El Carmelo Native Daughters, has chosen Mission Hall as the place and Wednesday evening, August 19, as the date for their joint benefit whist and dance.

El Carmelo Parlor No. 256, N. S. G. W., drum corps will again represent this locality in the September celebration to be held this year in Ls Angeles. Drum and drill practice at regular intervals during the past month has put the corps in trim, and Daly City as well as Colma will be proud of the recognition this organization will bring them in the Los Angeles Admissin day parade.

Three more candidates were duly initiated into El Carmelo No. 256, N. S. G. W., last Wednesday evening. The work was exemplified in a splendid manner by El Carmelo's own officers.

??? QUESTION BOX ???

Question: Who will pay the expenses of the local drum corps representing this community in the September 9 parade in Los Angeles?

Answer: Those who attend the annual drum corps dance on the evening of August 22 at the Daly City auditorium will and in a big way, and also those who like an evening playing cards may help the cause by their attendance on Wednesday evening, August 19, in Masonic Hall. Dancing will follow the card party.

DO YOU KNOW THAT

In previous years expenses of the drum corps were small, due to the fact that the September 9th celebration was nearer home?

These expenses were met by the individual members and the Parlor?

This year the boys have a longer journey, and with it added expenses, and so have elected to hold their third annual ball, which affair had been discontinued for some years back?

While this ball has been intended to raise money, its social success goes without saying. And now you know about everything with this exception.

JEFFERSON HIGH ADMITS BIG CLASS

Jefferson Union high school opened on last Monday morning with the largest enrollment in its history. At the close of the day there were 358 registration cards handed in by the students, 107 of which were Freshmen from the local grammar schools.

The program for the semester had been arranged before the close of last term so that the students were able to enroll in their individual classes without delay. On Monday books were distributed to Freshmen and on Tuesday all of the upper classmen received their complete quota. Consequently work began without any delay.

There are two new faces on the faculty this year, Miss A. D. Smith, who will teach commercial subjects and Spanish, and Mr. R. L. Gray, who will teach science and mathematics. Both of these teachers have had successful experience in high school work and are highly recommended both by the universities and the schools where they were previously engaged.

During the summer vacation many repairs were made to the building. The outside was completely renovated and painted. The tables in the Physics laboratory were refinished and an additional counter was placed in the library so that additional shelves will be available for text and reference books hereafter.

Principal James Ferguson stated that he was delighted with the fine spirit of co-operation shown by the students in getting down to business promptly. The registration was never completed with less friction or delay, and the giving out of the text books was systematized to a point approaching perfection. He predicts a most successful year for the students of Jefferson High.

Under the leadership of Mr. Harry Waters, the band will continue its work as part of the regular high school program, and it is quite possible that there will be music at the football games this fall.

MANY NEW PUPILS AT GRAMMAR SCHOOLS

The Jefferson district grammar schools opened last Monday with an enrollment much larger than last year. About 1,600 boys and girls of Daly City and Colma registered for the year's school work.

District Superintendent R. L. Crane announces that the faculty will be the same as last year, with two exceptions. Mr. Wauhab, the manual training teacher, resigned to enter the insurance business, and his place is to be taken by Mr. Mathews. Mr. Walters has been engaged to teach band music.

Classes have been assigned, pupils are busy at work, and the school is starting off in good shape for what is expected to be a record year.

During the vacation period, the local school buildings were repaired, furniture refinished, and everything put in shape for the comfort and convenience of the students.

AN ENJOYABLE PARTY

Miss Dorothy Nelson, of Brunswick street, was honored by a party given by her father on Thursday evening of last week. The home was prettily decorated, the color scheme being carried out in pink and blue. Indoor games were played during the evening and dancing was also enjoyed. At a late hour a buffet supper was greatly enjoyed by the following guests: Misses Harriet Anderson, Emma Boskey, Jessie Augustien, Leola Hutchings, June Mason and Kathryn Huilbut; Messrs. Harold Hutchings, De Vane Peccola, Bruno Conci, Albert Guisti, Vernon Rheume, Robert Jaccona, and Charles Barnard and Paul Weinskey, of San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Peterson, of Frankfort street, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Al Green, of San Diego avenue, and their niece Katherine Ryan, motored to Yountsville last Sunday, where they attended the Manila day celebration which was given under the auspices of the United Spanish War Veterans. There were about 2,000 guests present at this celebration.

Dell's accordion band will play for the dance, so come on and let's make this a farewell party.

Say, folks! If you happen to be in Los Angeles over the 9th of September, don't forget to drop in at the Westminster Hotel. The drum corps will be stopping there.

And listen to this! Ladies attending the annual ball will receive free tickets entitling them to dance with the Drum Major, or as you know him, "Ernie, the Butcher."

DALY CITY CLUB DEFEATS CANTON

Creighton Davies, one of the most promising youngsters ever developed at Jefferson high school, pitched a seven hit game for Daly City last Sunday to defeat the Canton I. O. O. F. nine, 8 to 3, on the local diamond. The Merchants' twirler struck out five batters and walked six. Not bad for the first start in two months.

A smart catcher was all Davies needed to make the victory a cinch. He received the best handling possible by Ken Cameron. The local backstop turned in his best exhibition of the season, making three putouts at the plate.

The Merchants' batters helped the local battery along by hitting in the pinches. Eleven bingles were collected off Creighton, the Canton hurler, and all of them helped to build up Daly City's run column. George Rettig led the slugging brigade with three safeties in four tries. Aiello and Davies were next in line with two hits each. Davies also drove in three runs with his blows, a double and a single.

and there was a red mark where something had hit him. But it didn't kill him. It just hurt him dreadfully and knocked him down. He closed his eyes for just a wee minute with the pain, and when he opened them there was the hunter running toward him and shouting excitedly. I guess by the way he acted that he never had shot anybody like Flathorns before, or he would have known better than to run out that way. The minute old Flathorns saw him he forgot all about being afraid of the hunter. He forgot all about the pain from the hurt made by that terrrible fire-stick. He just jumped to his feet, all the hair on the back of his neck standing on end with anger, and with a fierce-sounding snort he put his big horns down and rushed straight at that hunter. The fire-stick banged once more, but I guess the hunter was too frightened to shoot straight. Anyway the hunter dropped his fire-stick and started to climb a tree just the way you do, Buster.

"He got out of reach of Flathorns just in time. He was the worst scared hunter ever you saw. His eyes looked as if they would pop out of his head. When he reached the first branches he hung on for dear life while old Flathorns butted the tree so hard that I didn't know but he would knock it down. It was all the hunter could do to hold on. How he did yell! It makes me laugh now just to think of it. Then old Flathorns stamped on that fire-stick and threw it about until I guess it wasn't good for much. After a while he grew tired and went off into the woods out of sight. The man waited a long time, and I guess finally he made up his mind that Flathorns really had gone away. He started to come down, but was only half way when out rushed Flathorns as angry as ever and the hunter scrambled

MERCHANTS TO STAGE AN EXCITING CONTEST

The committee in charge of the annual picnic sponsored by the Excelsior Merchants' Association, to take place next Sunday, Augst 16, at Portola Park, have been quite busy answering queries regarding the feature events prepared for the day.

One of the many features promised by the committee is the horseshoe throwing contest scheduled between Mayor Rossi of San Francisco and Mayor H. H. Smith of Daly City. This will undoubtedly be a contest worth going miles to see. It is reported that Mayor Rossi and Mayor Smith have been in training for some time for this event, and it is expected there will be an abundance of ringers in the game. They propose, it is said, to show some of the boys who think they are real good horseshoe pitchers just how an expert acts when he "heels the stake."

Of course there will be many other events of interest at the Excelsior Merchants' picnic next Sunday, but the contest between the two Mayors will be one of the most interesting events of the day, it is predicted.

FAMILY WIPED OUT IN SUICIDE PACT

Mrs. Earle Williams, widow of the former motion picture star, killed her two children, her mother and herself last Sunday at their apartment in San Francisco.

The tragedy was discovered at 9:30 A. M. On the faces of the two women and two children were cotton pads saturated with chloroform. Mrs. Williams was still living, but died in Central emergency hospital seven hours later without regaining consciousness. The wholesale chloroforming was the result of a suicide pact between Mrs. Williams and her 80-year-old mother, according to letters left by the two women.

NEW MOTORING LAWS ARE IN EFFECT TODAY

Changes in the California Vehicle Act adopted at the last session of the legislature become effective today, Friday, August 14. A summary of some of the most important new laws is presented by the legal department of the California State Automobile Association as follows:

Speed limits are raised five miles an hour in open territory, to 45 miles; in residence sections, to 25 miles; and in business sections, to 20 miles. The limit of 15 miles remains unchanged at intersections and grade crossings where the view is obstructed; on "blind" curves, and in school zones. Driving so slowly as to impede normal progress of traffic is made unlawful.

Minimum age for issuance of operator's license is raised from 14 to 16 years, with provision for license to minors between 14 and 16 on special application of parent or guardian.

Vehicles must be mechanically safe and officers are authorized to make inspections and require correction of defects.

Passing on the right is made legal only on city streets wide enough for two or more lines of traffic moving in the same direction.

When overtaking and passing another vehicle there must be sufficient clearance ahead to permit doing so without endangering either the overtaken vehicle or approaching traffic.

Front seats shall not be so overcrowded as to interfere with the driver's view or his control of the car.

Emergency vehicles are prohibited from using a siren except when actually responding to a call.

The descending driver on a one-way grade must back up to permit an ascending car to pass.

It is made a felony to take a vehicle without the owner's consent.

Pedestrians have the right of way at marked crosswalks and at ends of blocks, whether marked or not. But pedestrians must yield to vehicles when crossing at other points.

ETHEL BARRYMORE COMING TO THE GEARY NEXT WEEK

What will probably be the high point of the theatre this year will occur next Monday night, August 17, when Ethel Barrymore, the foremost living actress, will be seen in Richard Brinsley Sheridan's immortal satirical comedy of the foibles and fopperies of human nature, "The School for Scandal," at the Geary Theatre, San Francisco, for a period of two weeks only.

Miss Barrymore is making this year one of the most extensive of her illustrious career, presenting this great comedy under the management of Lee Shubert of New York, in many towns that haven't had spoken drama in years. Thus the "first lady of the theatre" is acting as a pioneer in the broad and sweeping movement to rejuvenate the so-called "road" for traveling theatrical companies.

The selection of "The School for Scandal" as Miss Barrymore's current play has been hailed everywhere with enthusiasm for this means that the whole country will have an opportunity of seeing one of the greatest comedies of the English language played by our foremost actress and a company of distinguished New York artists. Indeed Sheridan's classic enjoys wide popularity not only because common consent holds it as the most perfect acting comedy of the English language, but largely because the story is ageless and "undated," being just as timely and interesting and applicable to modes and manners and weaknesses of human nature today as it was when first presented in London a hundred and fifty years ago.

In Miss Barrymore's company are Walter Gilbert, McKay Morris, C. H. Croker-King, Beatrice Terry, Harry Plimmer, Ernest Rowan, Charles Romano, Anita Rothe, Anne Seymour, William Kershaw, Marcel Dill and others.

SAFETY FOR SWIMMERS

The following advice for swimmers, issued by the Red Cross life savers, is timely and worth heeding:

Learn to swim. This means every member of your family.

If you get in water over your head don't become panic-stricken. Keep your hands under water, pushing down. This will keep your head out, making it possible for you to breathe.

Don't swim in unprotected places.

Don't dive into water unless you are sure of its depth.

Keep your small children near you at the beach.

Don't use automobile inner tubes as floats.

Don't duck children or grownups. It creates fear.

Don't swim alone, regardless of your ability.

Don't swim past the life-lines. It takes just as much ability to swim in water five feet deep as it does in water 500 feet deep.

Don't swim for at least an hour and a half after eating.

Learn the prone-pressure method or resuscitation.

Employees of a New York railroad found a robin's nest on the airbrake compressor of one of the locomotives.

HARD WORK PRESCRIBED AS BEST REMEDY FOR BUSINESS

Merle Thorpe, editor of Nation's Business, prescribes hard work as a cure for depression.

"It is not a question of general business coming back; it is a question of bringing it back," he warns. "There is no shot cut to general business recovery; only a long road for individual effort, sweat and sacrifice."

"The individual business man," he adds, "is looking for a magician to pull a rabbit out of the hat. If he would start in tomorrow to increase his own particular activity, to be content to build a brick at a time on what he now has, why, in 60 days the country would feel the stimulus and old General Business would come galloping down Main Street announcing restored and normal business activity."

PRIVATE UTILITY PUTS UP CASH TO PAY CITY WORKERS

Chicago's municipal employee's can thank a private utility company that they got their wages in June, according to a news item in the New York Times. Along about the end of May, the Times says, the city government was in such financial straits that it looked as if there wouldn't be any pay day for some time to come. But the Commonwealth Edison Company saved the day by paying $2,000,000 taxes in advance, thus providing the city with money to meet the payroll.

will continue to have an electric icebox and will never again be satisfied to spend half a day mopping up the kitchen after the visit of the old-fashioned iceman.

I believe the old-fashioned washtub has gone for good and that anybody who thinks the American wife is going back to the old days of drudgery and inconveniences is two-thirds cuckoo and one-third army mule.

I believe three square meals a day will always be the American standard, but that even if we miss one or two it won't hurt us.

I believe in common sense and natural vision as opposed to the "fidgets" and the use of smoked glasses when anything goes wrong.

I believe in the silver lining, the rainbow after the storm, the plunge through the center, the infallibility of the slogan "Never lead with your chin," and the potency of the cries "Block that kick!" and "Hold 'em Yale!"

I believe that much of the world depression is "done by mirrors."

I believe the worst is over, and that it was never as bad as it was advertised.

Students of Northwestern University voted on the most popular figures in the news—that is, on the people they most liked to read about. At the top of the list stood Al Capone, Clara Bow, Jack Dempsey and Bobby Jones. John D. Rockefeller, Bishop Cannon, Rudy Vallee and John Philip Sousa were less popular. The standing of Hoover, Al Smith, Lindbergh and Aimee McPherson was not reported.

Speaking of popularity, Arthur Pryor, famed trombonist and bandmaster, has about as many admirers as the next one. But one enthusiastic friend nearly caused a theatre panic once by shouting "Pryor! Pryor!" at the conclusion of one of his concert numbers. The audience thought it was a cry of "Fire! Fire!"

CALIFORNIA NEWS REVIEW

The San Francisco site for the $1,000,000 Veterans' Diagnostic Hospital will be announced from Washington before September 1, it is believed.

Twenty-eight cans of Loch Laven trout, containing 40,000 young fish, have been planted for future sport by anglers in Lake Milliken, northeast of Napa.

The Toteco ranch purebred Holstein dairy herd of 126 head has been purchased by Jim Pogue of Exeter from Pat Longan of Tulare. The price is believed to have been $30,000.

Steel spans are being erected on the eleven piers for the new Jenner bridge across the Russian River, near Jenner. The bridge, which will cost $175,000, will be open to travel before the winter sets in.

Determined to make a speedy selection, state officials completed plans for an inspection tour of sites for the proposed $1,000,000 mental hospital to be built in the Los Angeles area. More than 300 sites offered for the institution will be inspected between August 17 and 22.

In a resolution adopted by the Police Commission of San Francisco recently, Chief of Police Quinn and his department were highly commended for favorable mention of them in the Wickersham committee report. The report said that San Francisco is one of the best policed cities in America.

Fire Chief J. J. Bradley of Oroville warns local residents that they must conserve water to insure enough to fight fires in the city. The three water storage reservoirs near the city are at a low water mark, but the service company has promised to keep them full at the expense of farmers using the water.

H. R. Keller, appointed Kings county farm adviser, to take the place of Wallace Sullivan, who has been allowed a leave of absence to attend the University of Kansas to obtain his master's degree, has assumed the duties of the new office. Keller has been assistant farm adviser of Fresno for severalf years.

Protection of California's agricultural industry against plant pests was cited as the major policy of Dudley Moulton, director of agriculture, as he completed organization of a new division of quarantine administration. A. C. Fleury, who has been serving as quarantine officer, will assist Moulton in the new division.

Lack of evidence was the reason the State Railroad Commission assigned in dismissing the application of Santa Clara Valley members of the California Prune Growers' Association for reduced electric rates on agricultural pumping. The growers had asserted in their petition that the power cost is disproportionately high in the cost of producing prunes.

Tulare again claims fourth place among all counties in the State in dairy production, according to W. J. Higdon of Tulare, president of the California Dairy Council. The annual report of the California Bureau of Dairy Control, recently completed, credits Tulare county with 9,489,271 pounds of butter fat in 1930, for which farmers of the county received approximately $4,000,000.

The State Division of Motor Vehicles reported that 244 persons lost their lives in automobile accidents on California highways during last June. This was said to be the second highest monthly total recorded, surpassed only by the November, 1930, figure of 258 deaths. The 244 deaths brought the 1931 semiannual total up to 1216 deaths, 150 more than for the first half of 1930.

It's not for the wings of an angel that some 300 San Quentin prisoners are pining, but for the wings of a Lindbergh. "San Quentin Prepares to Fly," is the somewhat wistful title of an article by Lew Frisbey in the August issue of the "Bulletin," periodical published in the prison. This number is the first issue under the new editor, Cromwell Ormby, once attorney for Aimee Semple McPherson. The aviation class is conducted by William Underwood, inmate instructor, who has constructed a model of a Boeing fighting ship to illustrate his lectures. Underwood served in Naval aviation during the war and held a transport pilot's license. "Althought curriculum does not include actual instruction in the air (for obvious reasons)", says the article, more than 300 men are being given a thorough ground course similar to that given aviation students on the outside."

Dryden Phelps, principal of Ming Te College, West China university at Chengtu, has applied to the office of Californians Inc. to arrange for the purchase of ten pounds of California redwood seed. The order will be placed with a Fort Bragg lumber firm, and is at the request of General Shae, who is said to have expressed the hope that some day China may boast of redwoods as tall as in some California groves. The seeds will be planted in nurseries in China. When the seedlings have attained the proper height they will be transplanted outdoors.

Frank Daybell, citriculture expert of Porterville and chairman of the citrus department of the Tulare County Farm Bureau, was recently chosen a member of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers.

Walls of the California Institution for Women, at Tehachapi, rapidly rearing themselves skyward under hands of many workmen, and occupation of the structure will be effected by first of the year. More than 130 women, now imprisoned at San Quentin, will occupy the beautiful $500,000 building, and will work in the open air, where they will be brought back to physical and mental health.

"Back to the farm" appears to have been the solution of the present depression, sought by workmen, temporarily out of jobs. An even dozen new homes are under construction in the Leitch colony, near Oakdale, the most of them by either recent purchasers of small farms, or by men who bought land a number of years ago for "a rainy day." Included in the latter are a number of oil workers from the Bakersfield section.

Imperial Valley ranchers received assurance that the Colorado river will furnish enough water for all supply purposes for the next few days, at least, due to rains above the Grand Canyon, where the water discharge had risen to 7200 second-feet recently and was nearing 8000 feet. At Yuma the discharge had dropped to 500 second-feet and will doubtless reach almost a standstill before the upstream rains reach this point. Fortunately this is the low period for valley irrigation.

Beaumont will take an active part in the Yucaipa Apple Show this year. Supervisor Robert Dillon and Guy Bogart have arranged for Beaumont day there. A band, composed of Beaumont and Banning musicians, will give a concert and there will be other features. Some of the best fruit from the Beaumont orchards will be exhibited in the apple show this year. Because of the large crop of apples all through this section, it is predicted the show will be the best ever held.

The fungus which causes a loss of 12 to 15 per cent in the potential lumber value of all standing California redwoods has been isolated after eight years of research by Prof. Emanuel Fritz of the division of forestry, University of California. And the cause of the fungus, according to Professor Fritz's announcement, can be laid at the hands of fire carelessness. The fungus causing brown heart rot, to which the name Poria sequoiae has been given, obtains its foothold on the redwood through trunk scars caused by fire, the Fritz report reveals. "Irreparable damage has been done by this fire scar fungus," declared Professor Fritz. "Our findings just offer another proof of the necessity for greater precaution against fires in our forests."

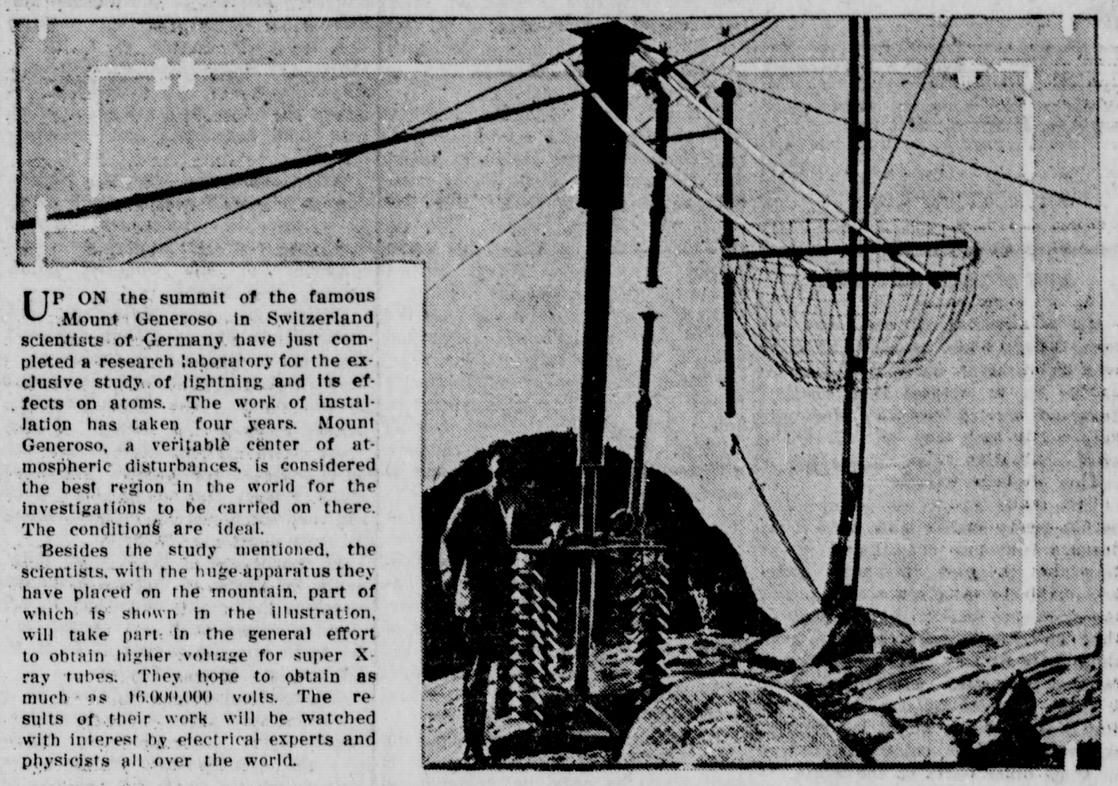
Beware the black widow spider. That warning was issued again by Dr. K. H. Sutherland, Orange county health officer, upon being informed that another case of severe illness as the result of the spider's sting had been reported. The latest case to be reported is that of Wilbert Mayse, nephew of Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Hartley of Placentia. Mayse, an oil worker, was reported to have been bitten severely on the hip. Persons bitten by spiders should not take a chance with home remedies, Dr. Sutherland suggested, as the consequences of bites from the spiders with the red spots on their abdomens may have very serious results. The Mayse case was the second black-widow bite in the county reported during July. A Mexican lad, believed to have been bitten by a poisonous insect which may have been the notorious black widow is recovering after a long stay in a hospital, Dr. Sutherland said.

Courtesy will be the watchword of local committees throughout the State working with the Safety Conference of the California Chamber of Commerce, it was announced by Mrs. Leiland Atherton Irish of Los Angeles, vice chairman of the conference. "Courtesy is the greatest safety factor of the highways," Mrs. Irish said. "If you are courteous you keep to the right of the road, will use the proper arm signals, slow down at intersections, keep within the speed limit, be alert, and the greatest mechanical courtesy is in having proper brakes. The irritable driver is one of the greatest menaces to society. Criminals do not exact the toll of life and property that is taken among the citizens of California by the driver who irritably disregards the rights of others. If you are irritable you will neglect all the vital factors of safety, with the possibility of death and injury to your fellow drivers and to yourself and family." The Safety Conference will devote the last two weeks of the month to the enforcement of laws directly related to courtesy and aimed at law infractions of the irritable driver.

The juvenile watermelon eating championship of California will be at stake during the State Fair at Sacramento, it was revealed. Competition has been set for September 5, the opening day of the exposition, which is also children's day. Officials of the fair said contestants will be judged both for speed and accuracy. The only prize is the honorary title—and perhaps a stomach-ache.

It is expected that over 200 tons of Kadota figs will be packed by fig farms in Perris Valley this season.

Studying the Lightning on a Mountain Top



UP ON the summit of the famous Mount Generoso in Switzerland scientists of Germany have just completed a research laboratory for the exclusive study of lightning and its effects on atoms. The work of installation has taken four years. Mount Generoso, a veritable center of atmospheric disturbances, is considered the best region in the world for the investigations to be carried on there. The conditions are ideal.

Besides the study mentioned, the scientists, with the huge apparatus they have placed on the mountain, part of which is shown in the illustration, will take part in the general effort to obtain higher voltage for super X-ray tubes. They hope to obtain as much as 16,000,000 volts. The results of their work will be watched with interest by electrical experts and physicists all over the world.

GOOD MIXER

"MY DAUGHTER got a lot out of her college course," a middle aged mother told me the other day, "but she's not such a good mixer as I am even if I never did go to college."

This was rather surprising to hear, as I knew that the daughter under discussion had been a leader among her classmates and was at the time chairman of the reception committee for graduation week. No one could fairly say that such a girl was not a "good mixer." But the mother went on.

"In some ways she is a fine cook and she learned a lot about planning meals and fixing up tasty dishes that don't cost much, but they have some of those new electric mixers in the cooking school kitchen and the girls have just got into the habit of using them. I'm old fashioned and I still think that a cake that is mixed regularly with a big wooden spoon tastes a lot better and bakes better than one that is mixed by electricity and I know a number of good cooks who agree with me."

I didn't stop to argue the point, but I admit to being new fashioned enough or lazy enough to think that any electrical or mechanical devices that lessen physical work and shorten the time required in cooking are worth the benefit of a doubt. So far as any scientific experiments can go to show there is no difference between eggs beaten with a rotary egg beater and eggs beaten with wire whisk or a fork at the expense of two or three times much energy and time.

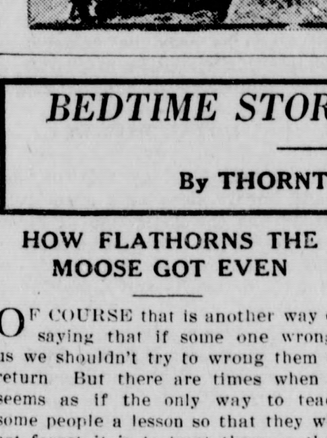
BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

HOW FLATHORNS THE MOOSE GOT EVEN

OF COURSE that is another way of saying that if some one wrongs us we shouldn't try to wrong them in return. But there are times when it seems as if the only way to teach some people a lesson so that they will not forget it is to treat them as they treat others. If was something like this with Flathorns the Moose when he did the thing about which Honker the Goose told Buster Bear and Peter Rabbit and the others sitting on the shore of the pond of Paddy the Beaver deep in the Green Forest.

"It was this way," began Honker. "Old Flathorns had been hunted and hunted by men with terrible guns until he was so uneasy and worried that he couldn't eat or sleep. The rustling of a leaf falling from a tree would make him jump and shake all over. It was dreadful. He didn't dare go to any of the places or use any of the paths which had been perfectly safe all summer. Once in a while he would steal down to the lake where I was, and while he got his breath between drinks he would tell me about his trouble.



"If These Men Would Fight Fairly, I Wouldn't Be Afraid," Said He.

"'If these men things would fight fairly, I wouldn't be afraid,' said he. 'But they don't. What chance have I got against them when they kill or hurt with their terrible fire-sticks while yet a long way off? If they would meet me face to face and fight fairly, as any honest liver in the Great Woods does, I wouldn't be afraid. I've never harmed or bothered them. If I could just catch one of them without his terrible fire-stick, I'd show you who's afraid.'

"Right while he was talking there was the bang of one of those terrible fire-sticks, and old Flathorns went right down on his knees with a grunt, and there was a red mark where something had hit him. But it didn't kill him. It just hurt him dreadfully and knocked him down. He closed his eyes for just a wee minute with the pain, and when he opened them there was the hunter running toward him and shouting excitedly. I guess by the way he acted that he never had shot anybody like Flathorns before, or he would have known better than to run out that way. The minute old Flathorns saw him he forgot all about being afraid of the hunter. He forgot all about the pain from the hurt made by that terrible fire-stick. He just jumped to his feet, all the hair on the back of his neck standing on end with anger, and with a fierce-sounding snort he put his big horns down and rushed straight at that hunter. The fire-stick banged once more, but I guess the hunter was too frightened to shoot straight. Anyway the hunter dropped his fire-stick and started to climb a tree just the way you do, Buster.

"He got out of reach of Flathorns just in time. He was the worst scared hunter ever you saw. His eyes looked as if they would pop out of his head. When he reached the first branches he hung on for dear life while old Flathorns butted the tree so hard that I didn't know but he would knock it down. It was all the hunter could do to hold on. How he did yell! It makes me laugh now just to think of it. Then old Flathorns stamped on that fire-stick and threw it about until I guess it wasn't good for much. After a while he grew tired and went off into the woods out of sight. The man waited a long time, and I guess finally he made up his mind that Flathorns really had gone away. He started to come down, but was only half way when out rushed Flathorns as angry as ever, and the hunter scrambled back as fast as ever he could. Flathorns kept him up in that tree all night and it was a pretty cold night, too. He certainly was getting even for all the worry and trouble the hunters had made him, and I didn't blame him a bit. Do you?"

"Not a bit! Served that hunter right. Guess he knows now what it is like to be hunted," growled Buster Bear in his deep grumbly, rumbly voice, his little eyes twinkling. "Wish I could have seen him."

"Did the hunter get away?" asked Peter.

HOT DAYS WITH COOL DESSERTS

WITH one of the inexpensive vacuum freezers, or a mechanical refrigerator, one may have a different frozen dish every day while the warm weather lasts. When ices and creams have begun to pall on the family taste, try some of these dishes that are cool but simple to prepare.

Lemon Foam.

Boil together one cupful of sugar and one and one-half cupfuls of water for five minutes. Stir in two tablespoonfuls of corn starch mixed with one-half cupful of cold water, and cook over boiling water fifteen minutes. Add three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, one teaspoonful of salt and one stiffly beaten egg white. Chill and serve on sponge cake.

Fruit Fluff.

Mix one and one-half tablespoonfuls of cornstarch with half a cupful of milk. Scald one and one-half cupfuls of milk in a double boiler. Beat two eggs slightly and add with one-fourth cupful of sugar and one-half teaspoonful of salt to the scalded milk; add cornstarch mixture, stir and cook until thick. Cool, well covered, add one teaspoonful of vanilla, and pour the custard over two cupfuls of sliced fruit. Beat the egg whites, add one-third cupful of powdered sugar, and pile on top of the pudding. Bake long enough to brown the meringue. Chill and serve cold.

Cinnamon Stick Pudding.

Wash, soak and cook one-half pound of prunes with a three-inch stick of cinnamon in the water, using three cupfuls of water. When the prunes are soft, remove the pits. Measure the liquid, adding more boiling water to make three cupfuls. Mix one-fourth of a cupful of cornstarch with cold water to make a paste and add slowly to the prune mixture. Cook carefully with one cupful of sugar, stirring constantly until it thickens, then cook over hot water for fifteen minutes more. Add one tablespoonful of lemon juice, salt to taste. Pour into molds or glasses to chill and serve with whipped cream.

Dixie Peaches.

Line six sherbet glasses with shredded coconut; place a half of a fresh or canned peach on the coconut, cut side up. Cover peach with any good fruit sirup, fill the cavity in the peach with a spoonful of favorite jam. Cover with whipped cream and top with a bit of the jam for garnish. These may be served on rounds of sponge cake.

Break the Chain

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

YOU'LL hear a lot, as like as not,
From women and from men
Who hear a tale and seldom fail
To tell the tale again.
But when they come to me with some
New scandal they obtain,
I let it rest, I try my best
At least to break the chain.

They just drop in with some one's sin,
A secret to disclose.
They tell with winks what some one thinks
And not what some one knows.
They say, "My word! You haven't heard
Of that? I wonder why?"
Then if they vow you can't tell how
You heard it, it's a lie.

Folks do not fear the truth to hear,
To tell the truth as well;
It's only when they doubt it, then
They fear a tale to tell.
They make you swear you'll never share
The secret told to you.
When that they say, then here's the way
To fool them—never do.

THE WAR ON POLIO

The term "polio" is a somewhat recent designation for the dread disease more commonly known as infantile paralysis. It is really an abbreviation, or simplification, of the word "poliomyelitis," the medical term for this malady.

While peculiarly a disease of children, adults are by no means exempt from it. Perhaps the most prominent American who has suffered from polio in recent years is Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York. His almost complete recovery, through scientific treatment, has strongly brought to attention the fact that the disease does not necessarily make its victim a permanent cripple.

In gratitude for his own recovery, and in a desire to place proper treatment within the reach of all who are similarly afflicted, Governor Roosevelt has recently taken the lead in a national crusade against polio.

At Warm Springs, Georgia, where the governor's cure was effected, there has been organized a non-profit making foundation, under the presidency of Dr. John Rurah, famed pediatrician of Baltimore, also a polio victim, who has been a patient there since last April.

The need for such an organization is emphasized by the fact that there are more than 300,000 cases of infantile paralysis in the United States alone, and the number is increasing. The movement for the eradication of this blighting disease should have the hearty support of humanitarians and philanthropists everywhere.

One obstacle to disarmament is that each nation wants a little more security than it is willing to grant its neighbors.

THE WORLD OUTLOOK

Many experienced observers of world affairs are greatly alarmed over the present outlook. Some go so far as to predict that another European war is inevitable, and perhaps not a long way off. Even the most optimistic must agree that a serious situation exists.

This, we believe, is not because any nation really wants war, but it is because economic conditions are so desperate in most European countries that the governments in power are unable to satisfy the demands of their own people for a chance to earn their daily bread. There is suffering in America—real suffering—among a large element of our population. But it is relatively slight in comparison with what is being experienced in some other parts of the world.

The pitiful paradox is that there is enough food and clothing and raw materials in the world to make everyone fairly comfortable if some means could be found for its rational distribution.

The granaries of the United States and Canada are almost bursting with surplus wheat while millions go hungry; there is an immense cotton surplus while millions go unclad; other basic commodities go begging because those who need them have no money with which to buy.

Will the statesmen and business leaders of the world be able to avert the crisis which these conditions threaten to bring about?

London is still the largest city, but probably most of its people wish it weren't.

Wonder if Mr. Raskob favors a moratorium for the Democratic party.

MEMENTO OF A WAR ACE

The heroism of Major Raoul Lufbery, noted French-American war ace, will be remembered by thousands who will from time to time look upon the airplane compass used in his last and fatal flight, which was deposited in the Smithsonian Institution in Washington a few days ago.

Lufbery was officially credited with shooting down seventeen German planes, and his comrades assert that he really brought down more than twice that number, before his death near Tours, France, May 19, 1918. On his last flight his plane coaght fire, and Lufbery jumped without a parachute to his doom.

His compass was salvaged from the burned plane by a French soldier, and given to an army surgeon, who tried to find some member of Lufbery's family to whom he might present it, but without success. After passing through several hands the compass was finally given to the museum of the Smithsonian Institution.

Lufbery was born in France, but was reared in Wallingford, Conn., becoming an adventurer and soldier of fortune. He joined the famous Lafayette Escadrille, composed of Americans who entered the air service of France early in the war. When the United States became an active participant in the struggle he was transferred to the American air force.

His aerial exploits were among the most brilliant of the war, and it is well that he may be remembered through the exhibition of his flame-seared compass in the national capital.

A ROYAL TARGET

Former King Alfonso XIII of Spain would hardly class as a great ruler, but he has the distinction of having been the target of would-be assassins oftener than any other monarch—ten times, to be exact—and came through unscathed.

Alfonso was proclaimed king on the day of his birth, May 17, 1886, his father having died some months before, of tuberculosis, at the age of 28. The first attempt on Alfonso's life was on the day of his coronation, when he was 18 years old. Among the most spectacular attacks made on him was one while driving with President Loubet of France, in Paris, and another on his wedding day, May 31, 1906, when a bomb thrown at him and his bride while riding from the church killed twenty or more in the streets of Madrid, the royal pair escaping injury. The last attack was on April 13, 1913, when an anarchist fired three shots at him. This time the king wheeled his horse and ran down his assailant.

In between were attempts by bomb and pistol, but he seemed to have a charmed life. Throughout all these ordeals Alfonso displayed absolute coolness and courage, which greatly added to his popularity. For in spite of the many attempts to assassinate him, he was popular with the Spanish masses.

When the revolt against the monarchy became too great to be withstood last April, Alfonso quietly abdicated and left the country. Those who have watched his career will hardly believe that he fled through lack of personal courage. His action was doubtless inspired more by a desire to see Spain saved from the terrors of civil war. If he sometimes sighs for the lost glories of kingship, he may also reflect that he is extremely lucky to be alive.

THE CIVIL LEGION

Among the genuinely patriotic organizations of the United States is the Civil Legion, composed of men who served the nation in official civil capacities during the World war. War governors of the several states, members of non-militray war boards and commissions, and others who gave their services in the prosecution of necessary war activities at home are eligible for membership.

It is the announced desire of the Civil Legion to co-operate closely with the American Legion in all matters pertaining to the national defense. In fact, it is expected that a resolution will be passed by the American Legion at its coming national convention endorsing the Civil Legion and formally accepting this co-operation.

In seeking a closer affiliation with former military men, the Civil Legion declares that it "has never and will not engage in any financial enterprise or adventures of any kind," and that it "seeks no appropriations or contributory gifts."

By keeping alive the patriotic spirit which animated their members during the war, both the American Legion and the Civil Legion may further contribute to the safety of the nation in case another war should unhappily occur. But neither desires to see another war, and both may be depended upon to use every honorable means to prevent such a calamity.

HONORARY DEGREES

Among the valuable public services that may be placed to the credit of Will Rogers, his recent debunking of honorary degrees is conspicuous and refreshing. When he was offered the honorary degree of L. H. D. (Doctor of Humanities) by Oklahoma City University, he gracefully declined the honor in a telegram which was both humorous and evidently sincere.

After explaining that the highest degree he would accept would be A. D. (Doctor of Applesauce) only if conferred by the kindergarten department of the Oolagah public school, Will added:

"What are you trying to do? make a joke out of college degrees? They are in bad enough repute as it is, without trying to hand 'em around to comedians. The whole honorary degree thing is the 'hooey.' I saw some college giving Mellon one, and he is a billion bucks short. I got too much respect for people that work and earn 'em to see 'em handed around to every notorious character."

In recognition of Will's good judgment, the Eagle, of Dothan, Alabama, suggests that every university in the country should with one accord confer upon him the degree of C. S. D. (Doctor of Common Sense).

Collegiate degrees conferred as a result of conformance to curriculum requirements are generally futile enough. The honorary degree is not only futile, but positively amusing to anyone with a sense of humor approaching that of Will Rogers.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

Cal M. Feezer, editor and manager of the Mount Carroll (Ill.) Mirror-Democrat, says:

That in any city in which a newspaper is published, the merchants are always urging the editor to ask the people to buy at home, no matter whether they are advertisers in the paper, or whether they send out their letters and statements on paper not printed at the office where they make their request or not. And in most places the merchants, many of them, receive their stationery from wholesale houses from which they buy goods, thus going away from home themselves and depriving the local newspaper of that which is morally their own.

Sometimes it is very hard to keep from telling the one who makes the request that they should practice what they preach. Many merchants send away for their own personal requirements. Even dry goods and ready-to-wear merchants allow their wives and daughters to go out of town for their own personal needs. People learn of this and do not take kindly to the advice that they should buy at home. All in all it does not augur well—neither with the reader nor the editor.

That people should buy at home is as true as gospel, for the home merchant is a taxpayer, is a free giver to this, that and the other public enterprise for which he is solicited every day, and the money spent at home remains there, while if sent to distant cities it is gone forever from the community. But we newspaper men would feel more like squaring away if the merchants themselves would have their stationery printed at home and would not act when solicited for an advertisement as if they were giving it more as an act of charity than as a boost for their own business, and there are many such merchants.

Few newspapers are published that are not eternally booming the town or city in which they are published, without money or the hope of any reward other than hoping to see their boosting carried out and their town made a better place, morally and financially.

Be a booster for the home town. Buy at home—not only the citizenry, but the merchants.

Practice what you preach!

The fellow who coined the term "idle rumor" had a queer idea of idleness.

"I've learned to forget about cooking dinner . . . since buying an Electric Range"

"BEFORE I bought an electric range, cooking dinner seemed to be always upon my mind. Now I can forget about it because my electric range cooks food automatically."

With an electric range you spend just enough time to put the meal in the oven. You set the time and temperature controls and leave the house if you wish, with the assurance that there will be a completely cooked meal awaiting your return.

For an average cost of 1c a meal per person for electric cooking you save hours of watching, waiting, stirring and basting. And electric cooking is as clean as sunshine. Then, too, the electric oven heats up to 400 degrees in 9 to 11 minutes. Platform cooking elements are faster.

Come in and see the electric range. You can have one installed for a few dollars down and a few dollars a month.

MOTORISTS ADVISED AGAINST DRIVE TO CITY OF MEXICO

Acting on offical information from Mexico, the California State Automobile Assocation warns motorists against attempting to reach Mexico City by automobile. Information on which the warning was based was transmitted through the American Automobile Association by General J. Andreu Almazan, secretary of communications and public works for Mexico.

The Automobile Association declared that it will be at least a year before the capital of Mexico and the United States are connected by an adequate highway, and in the meantime car owners should not under any conditions attempt to traverse the roads much farther south than Monterrey, 165 miles below the United States-Mexican border, which is reached by an excellent highway.

General Almazan pointed out that tourist travel south of Monterrey will interfere with road-building and "the tourist will run the risk of a difficult and perhaps dangerous trip."

The warning was prompted by the large number of inquiries reaching the Association, indicating that erroneous reports are current to the effect that a modern highway is now open all the way to Mexico City.

Mexican officials are doing an excelelnt job of building roads. They are anxious to open up their country to American car owners, but they have the comfort and safety of visitors in mind in urging them to not be too hasty in planning their motor visit.

free wheelingly speaking by don herold

I'D pay several cents a mile extra for that Free Wheeling sensation in my Studebaker—if I had to.

But the joke is, it doesn't cost me money—it saves me money.

A Studebaker is swell when running along with the motor engaged, but it is those moments of momentum—those miles of Free Wheeling—which give me my grandest thrills . . . and these don't cost—they PAY.

I sail along, manufacturing miles and money!

About one mile in seven or six or five is free—because you save from a seventh to a fifth of your gas and oil.

THE STORY

Harold Norman Atridge, an orphan, lives with his great-aunt Matilda, who reared him. At her death he finds himself penniless. At the close of the war he gets work in a bank. Taking a message to Marjorie Clarence, he finds her father in the throes of delirium tremens. Harold promises to take Marjorie into the country next day. They have an exciting day. They miss the last train back to London. On his way to his lodgings, Harold sees a shooting affray, during which one of the participants tosses a leather case to him.

It was a nightmare flight. Harold experienced the true nightmare sensation of trying to run from a bloodthirsty pursuer while apparently handicapped with legs as limp as strings of sausages and, seemingly with a cannon ball tied to each ankle. That was what it felt like, but the fact of the matter was that Harold made surprisingly good time across Morley common. He emerged thankfully on a road, and doubled blindly to the right. All the time he heard behind him the footsteps of uncounted pursuers (three in all, actually). No more shots were fired, either because they were afraid of attracting attention or else because Harold did not make a good mark amid those bulky furze bushes.

Harold pounded along half a mile of road, hearing all the time the pad-pad-pad of his pursuers' feet a hundred yards away. Not once in all that age-long flight did he see a policeman or a friendly civilian. The streets were as deserted as they might be expected to be in a respectable suburb at two in the morning. He ran and ran, gasping and stumbling. Then at last he staggered under the railway arch and emerged into homely Scae Fell avenue. He spurted down the road. His latch key came miraculously to hand, and he had the door open, he passed through, and he shut it again, before his pursuers arrived. He heard them stop outside, and he heard one or two sentences exchanged in a foreign tongue. He leaned against the door, choking for breath, and then he heard the footsteps fade away again down the street. He had escaped—from what, and with what, he was too utterly exhausted to care. He bolted and chained the door with muddled precaution, and took his weary way upstairs.

Harold sat on the side of his bed still gasping for breath. His clothes were wet with sweat and his limbs were shaking with fatigue. He sat huddled together for some minutes, until at last he could rouse himself to pull off his shoes. As for the leather case resting on his lap, that was beneath all notice at present.

After a while, however, he experienced a momentary curiosity about the case, and turned it over in his hands. It was just a small flat purse of soft brown morocco leather, less than six inches square, and from the broken straps which dangled from it Harold deduced that it was intended to be worn bandolier fashion over the shoulder. Evidently the bearded and spectacled gentleman whose corpse lay out on Morley common had worn it beneath his waistcoat, whence it had been torn by those who attacked him. He must have snatched it back and tried to escape just before he was shot. Harold opened it and drew forth the contents. Only a little packet of letters, a dozen or so, written in a sprawling masculine hand in a foreign language. Harold yawned prodigiously and stuffed them back again. They could wait until tomorrow, easily. All he wanted at the moment was to go to sleep.

He tugged off his clothes and left them in an untidy heap on the floor. Then he switched off the light and fell into bed. With a last glimmer of consciousness he pulled the morocco case for safety into bed with him. Then he seemed to fall ten million feet into a drift of soft warm down.

Corpses and letters and pistol shots; cars and caresses and kisses; Harold did not give another thought to any of these.

CHAPTER V

Sunday

At intervals of a million years or so some one persisted in whacking Harold on the head with a red-hot hammer. Every time the ill-intentioned person did this Harold muttered something and turned over. Finally some one fired off a pistol inside his head and Harold awoke with a start. He clutched the sheets and raised his head, gazing stiffly around him. A jumble of dreams and memories revolved in his brain. His eyes were gummy and weary, and there was a taste in his mouth as if he had been sucking copper coins all night. His eyes traveled uncomprehendingly round the room until in the far corner they met the little pig eyes of Puddingface, who was sitting up in bed staring at him amusedly.

"You've had a good night, I should think," said Puddingface.

"Um—humph," said Harold, and writhed.

The action caught something between his toes. He felt down in the bed. It was a leather strap, attached to a leather case, and instantly he began to remember the events of yesterday. Some one had been shot out on the common last night; from that some one Harold had taken this case; half a dozen other people had chased him all round Morley Park firing pistols at him. That was late at night. Goodness gracious! Before that he had been out in the country with Marjorie and behaved disgustingly. So had she. Harold's brain hopped from one unpleasant subject to another like a cat on hot bricks. What in the world had been going on on the common was more than he could possibly understand. It could not have been a dream—here was the case to prove the contrary. Nor could it have been something acted for the films, because they do not do film photography in the middle of the night, nor do the most realistic film actors fire loaded revolvers at perfect strangers. A further examination of the letters might be illuminating.

He hunched himself over on his shoulder so as partly to conceal from Puddingface what he was doing, and extracted the letters under cover of the bedclothes and began to read them. Two facts became obvious. They were in French, and they were love letters. Harold summoned up his half-forgotten matriculation French and began to read them. He made slow progress, for the handwriting was slovenly and there were numerous words Harold did not know. From the context, however, it slowly became apparent that they were words unlikely to appear in any dictionary. In fact the letters were love letters of the grossest and most besotted kind imaginable. Harold peered at the signatures. They were complicated, and enmeshed in a web of flourishes. Most of the later ones were merely words of endearment—just as a man might sign himself "your ownest ducky" if he were fool enough, thought Harold—but others were definitely signed with a name. That name, Harold decided, after prolonged examination, was Raphael.

Then came the turn of the addresses. The early letters were written on printed paper from some hotel or other in Paris—to Harold one Paris hotel meant the same as any other Paris hotel—but the others were—"Goodness gracious," said Harold to himself for the second time that morning—were addressed from Le Palais du Roi, Muhlbad-Menkhest. Harold plunged into what he knew of post-war geography, and managed to grasp a fleeting memory by the tail. Yes, Muhlbad-Menghest was the capital of the Danubian kingdom of Lesser Avaria, sometimes known as the kingdom of the Huns and Avars. And—yes—goodness gracious goodness—the present king of the Huns and Avars was Raphael, Raphael Metapodivitch. That explained a good deal, although not everything, of course. It explained why people were willing to risk their lives in revolver battles for the letters, for they would obviously be worth millions in blackmail while their publication would mean at least a revolution and maybe a war or two.

"We'll be late for dinner if we're not careful," said Puddingface, casually, sticking a leg out of the bedclothes.

"Dinner?" said Harold. He looked at his watch, but for the second time in three days he had forgotten to wind it.

"Past twelve, anyway," said Puddingface, reaching for his trousers.

Early Salt Tax

The following excerpt is taken from the "Travels of Marco Polo": "We shall now speak of the revenue which the grand khan draws from the city of Kin-sai and the places within its jurisdiction, constituting the ninth division or kingdom of Manji. In the first place, upon salt, the most productive article, he levies a yearly duty of 80 tomans of gold, each toman being 80,000 saggi and each saggio fully equal to a gold florin, and consequntly amount to 6,400,000 ducats. This vast produce is occasioned by the vicinity of the province to the sea and the number of salt lakes or marshes, in which, during the heat of summer, the water becomes crystalized, and from whence a quantity of salt is taken, sufficient for the supply of five of the other divisions of the province."

The Proper Comeback

A prominent English woman who recently visited us expressed her bewilderment with regard to the correct reply to the customary American greeting, "Pleased to meet you." No doubt there is a fitting response, if one could only think of it. Of course one might follow the lead of the old duke of Beaufort. An American gripped the duke warmly by the hand and said, "Pleased to meet you."

"And so you d—n well ought to be," returned the aged peer, crisply.—Boston Transcript.

Aerial Photography — A New Scientific Marvel

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IN MAY of last year the announcement was made that the United States army had added another brilliant achievement to the record which makes valid the boast that "the army does other things besides fight." A new record in long distance aerial photography had been set by the air corps of the army when Capt. A. W. Stevens, photographic expert, succeeded in taking a picture covering a distance of 270 miles in a single exposure. In 1929 Captain Stevens had set a long distance photographic record when his camera registered objects 227 miles away from the camera eye but his 1930 flight in a plane piloted by Lieut. John D. Corkille over Crater lake in Oregon added more than 50 miles to that record.

Upon his return from this flight, Captain Stevens declared "While I am very well satisfied with the results obtained on this particular mission, I am inclined to believe that it will only be a matter of time before we will develop a camera that will record even greater distances. Before we can use it, however, we must have a photographic plane that will take us considerably higher than 20,000 feet because from that altitude even an object as tall as Mount Rainier will sink below the horizon at 300 miles.

"Shooting at Mount Rainier from a distance greater than that between New York city and Washington is much like shooting at the moon, with the difference that you can see the moon. The principal task is to aim the camera in the general direction you believe your objective to be, snap the trigger and hope for luck." What "luck" the army captain had on this expedition was revealed by the remarkable photograph which is shown above.

Another achievement in this new scientific marvel of aerial photography, which was not so much a matter of luck, was demonstrated during the army air maneuvers over New York city during May of this year, the results of which are shown in the photographs numbered three and four above. As explained in the captions, these pictures were taken by exploding a bomb containing enough magnesium powder to make a 3,000,000,000 candlepower flash and snapping the shutter at the height of illumination.

It would seem to be an easy matter to drop a flashlight bomb and at the moment of the explosion to take the photograph. Since, however, there is a definite relationship between the altitude of the airplane and the height at which the bomb explodes, it is not so simple. Night photographs can be taken only at comparatively low altitudes. Measurements of the photographs taken over New York showed the airplane to have been flying at only 1,500 feet, although night photographs could be taken effectively up to around 3,000 feet. The lens cannot be left open until the bomb explodes because lights from the ground would blur the plates or film.

The only thing the air camera man has to do at night is to release the bomb; the rest of the details are taken care of automatically. The bomb, containing twenty-five pounds of magnesium powder, is checked in its fall by a small parachute and a time fuse sets the interval from the release to the explosion. As the bomb bursts the camera's shutter is automatically tripped by an ingenious mechanical device.

Before the World war the science of aerial photography, except for a few cases, most of which were unsuccessful, was virtually unknown. It took on added importance early in the war and developed rapidly as the airplane became such an important factor in waging successful battles. But it has been since the war that its most rapid development has taken place and that development in this country has been carried forward mainly by the United States army.

Although the army is chiefly interested in map-making and intelligence photography, each of which requires a different technique, it has many times sent its camera men and planes to co-operate with other government agencies. The army has indirectly aided commercial aerial photography by developing the best in technique and in precision of the instruments. In addition to military work, aerial surveys are used for a large variety of operations. Few public utility companies would consider putting down a new power line without first having an aerial survey made. Aerial photography is also in demand for forestry services, geological surveys, harbor developments, highway and traffic surveys, and all manner of city uses, from planning and zoning to tax equalization.

The cameras and equipment used for civil aerial surveying and for the production of aerial photographs as illustrations have been improved but little during the last ten years, because the ordinary air camera, operated at relatively low altitudes, meets all usual requirements at a small cost. This is not the case with military photography, and so it is in this branch that the latest developments are found.

Perhaps the most interesting development lies in the use of long-range or high-altitude cameras, the same technique being used also for lower altitude work through fog. In high altitude work the camera must have a long focal length (the distance from the nodal point—where the light rays cross, between the two lenses—to the surface of the plate or film). With a short focal length it would be possible for the camera to "take the whole world," but the detail would be too small. A camera with a long focal length, on the other hand, while it will not take more than about thirty-three square miles from an altitude of approximately 33,000 feet, gives such clearness of detail that the negatives may be readily enlarged to ten diameters.

If the camera is tilted an oblique photograph is taken—that is, a photograph which is progressively distorted as the objects taken are distant from the lens. Tremendous distances have been covered in this way and objects have been taken which were not visible to the naked eye, because aloft there is almost always, even on a clear day, a certain amount of ground haze.

Several refinements are necessary, however, before these photographs may be taken. The camera must be fitted with a special film sensitive only to infra-red rays below the visible spectrum—that is, the long wave lengths which go through fog easily. This condition is met by taking ordinary gelatine film and immersing it in a solution of kryptocyanine.

The next requisite is a special type of filter, so dense as to have the opaqueness of rubber. All lenses have to a greater or less extent the property of a prism; that is, they break up the white light into spectra. It is necessary under given conditions to use a filter to eliminate the active colors(such as violets, blues and greens) and restore the light to white. By increasing the opaqueness of the filter more of the visible spectrum is eliminated, and it is possible to eliminate it altogether. This is what has been done in the cast of the long-range camera.

Through its filter only the infra-red rays are admitted, and as ground haze or smoke is no obstacle to them, objects are recorded on the film which are invisible to the naked eye. In this way Captain Stevens was able to photograph Mount Rainier from the record distance of 270 miles, the peak jutting up above the horizon, though it was miles beyond it.

In the taking of photographs for map-making a special technique has had to be developed, equally applicable to military and commercial purposes. It is not enough to sight the camera and trip it; all sorts of things have to be determined before the photograph can be taken. Because only the center of each photograph can be considered anything like optically perfect, a large number of overlapping exposures have to be made.

1. Two hundred and seventy miles of wide open spaces! A photograph of Mount Rainier taken from over Crater lake, a distance of 270 miles, by Capt. Albert W. Stevens from an army air corps plane piloted by Lieut. John D. Corkille. To get the "shot," the two army airmen flew at 20,000 feet for nearly five hours in a temperature of 20 degrees below zero and came down only when their supply of liquid oxygen was exhausted. Some of the mountains shown in the picture are: 1. Mount Rainier, 270 miles; 2. Mount Hood, 200 miles; 3. Mount Jefferson, 175 miles; 4. Three Sisters, 125 miles; 5. Diamond Peak, 50 miles; Crescent Lake, 45 miles.

2. Captain Stevens and Lieutenant Corkille of the United States army air corps with the large aerial camera used in taking high altitude photographs. This camera uses a 30-inch focal length lens of special construction.

3. This night photograph of lower Manhattan, New York city, was taken by Captain Stevens from an airplane piloted by Lieutenant Corkille at an altitude of about 1,500 feet.. A bomb containing sufficient flashlight powder for a three billion candlepower flash was dropped from the plane and the picture taken with a specially constructed camera equipped with an automatic device for exposing the film at the height of illumination.

4. A night photograph of the Statue of Liberty and Fort Wood on Bedloe's island in New York harbor taken in the same manner as described in No. 4.

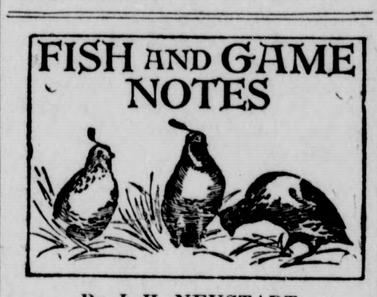
Aug. 7, 14, 1931.



By J. H. NEUSTADT

Now that the deer season has arrived, the advice for the care of meat recently issued by the Fish and Game Commission may be of value to the hunters of California.

Bleed deer by sticking knife in neck as near brisket as possible; never cut the throat. Clean at once, using either of the methods suggested. Remember that if the deer is killed in the morning it should be taken to camp as soon as possible.

First Method: Cut a small hole in the belly of the deer large enough to insert hand and move freely. Remove all entrails, etc., leaving heart and liver in place. Plug up hole with ferns or cloth. Some hunters carry a large needle and twine to sew up this hole. Take deer to camp.

Second Method: Open the deer from the brisket to the vent, taking out all the insides, wipe out with a slightly dampened piece of burlap or cloth; never use water. Take deer to camp at once. Protection from flies is the most important thing in the care of meat. If possible to hang deer up to clean, it should be hung by the horns. If it can not be hung up, it can be cleaned by placing it on its back, propping up the hips with rocks or pieces of wood to elevate the front of the deer for cleaning purposes.

In camp, unless the hunter desires to take the deer home with the hide on, it should be skinned at once. The deer should be hung up by the horns and all the blood allowed to drain out. After the skin is removed, the carcass should be allowed to hang for a short time, when the contact with the air will form a glaze that protects the meat from air and moisture. Some use black pepper to aid in this process. Salt should never be used, and water is banned, as, if water is used, it will sour the meat. All bloody and injured portions around the bullet hole should be carefully cut away, and if the deer is gut or paunch shot, speed in removing the insides is imperative. After the deer has been carefully wiped out and allowed to hang until the protecting glaze forms, it should be hung as high as possible, and covered with a wool sack or some other material that will protect it from the flies. The cloth sold for wiping automobiles has been found to be a very good material to cover the carcass of a deer, it being porous but still fly-proof. However, the main idea is to cover the deer and keep the flies away.

At night the covering should be removed, but in the morning it should be covered again and the meat wrapped either in canvass or in the hunter's blankets. This process should be repeated as long as the party camp, covering the meat in the time and leaving it exposed to t at night. To transport the meat best method is to cover it and it in blankets.

These simple suggestions, if lowed, will save the deer meat. following method of caring for skin is also suggested: When skin has been removed, whatever or flesh that adheres to it should carefully scraped off. The skin should then be thoroughly salted and always dried in the shade. Put plenty of salt in the wrinkles and corners. This is necessary for proper curing. Use no alum or other preservatives. Do not stretch or peg out the skin drying, and always hang the skin over a railing or horizontal bar if it is possible. This method will assure a real specimen hide.

DEER ARE PLENTIFUL REPORT OFFICIALS

With the opening of the deer season last Saturday, August 1, it was expected that sportsmen are destined to experience one of the greatest big game years in the history of the state, according to officials of the Division of Fish and Game.

From all sections of the state comes the report that deer are more plentiful this year than ever before. Many factors contribute to such a condition, chief among which are the mountain lion control measures and efficient patrol work of the Division, and the mild winters of the past number of years, according to game experts.

The opening season will include Sections 2, 2½, and 3. This embodies the coastal section from Mendocino to Ventura counties, inclusive. Other parts of the state will not be open to deer hunting until later in the year.

The types of deer to be found in most of this coastal region are of the black tail family. Various environments may cause coloration and other differences among the animals. In the southern end of the open area, hunters will bag the southern mule deer. The animals are said to be in excellent condition.

And with the opening of the shooting season, hunters should familiarize themselves with many important points, to-wit:

Observe the game laws, and help prevent forest fires.

Don't hunt in closed areas.

Be sure to carry your hunting license and deer tags.

Don't shoot on posted property without permission of the owner.

Dress in distinctive, colored clothing—red or white preferable.

Be sure your buck has branched horns or antlers.

See your buck clearly and don't shoot at anything else; it might be another hunter.

Learn how to take care of your deer and don't waste good meat.

Carry enough water for yourself and dog.

Know how to use emergency snake bite treatment.

These are but a few of the important points to observe, and with the exercise of common sense on the part of the hunter there is every reason to believe that the season can be made one of the greatest on record.

RESCUING BASS AND PERCH

Several thousand food fishes, including black bass and Sacramento perch, have just been rescued through the assistance of San Francisco business firms, according to a report from the Division of Fish and Game.

The fish were stranded in the receding waters of Lake Chabot, near Vallejo. Because of the exceedingly hot weather, emergency measures were necessary in order to prevent a total loss, and appeal was made to the division.

Due to activities of the bureau of fish rescue and reclamation in other parts of the state it was found impossible to send regular crews and equipment to Lake Chabot. Members in the San Francisco office therefore decided to undertake the emergency work.

Appeal was made along automobile row for trucks. The Robert A. Smith Company, Chevrolet dealers, volunteered the services of a one-ton truck. Then the Peoples' Dairy Company furnished twenty large cans, and the equipment was complete.

Donning bathing suits, the improvised crew caught the fish in small nets and placed them in the cans. They were transported to "live" ponds in the Mt. Eden district.

RECREATION FOR WOMEN

How the 4,500 professional and business women members of the American Women's Association of New York City employ their leisure hours is interestingly told by Mrs. Alice Robinson in a recent issue of the Medical Woman's Journal. These women live in their 27-story clubhouse at 533 West 57th street, which is one of the best equipped establishments of its kind in the world.

"The typical A. W. A. member," writes Mrs. Robinson, "swims, hikes, plays tennis, ping pong, golf, deck tennis, bridge, or takes some special form of gymnastic exercise. Sometimes she prefers to spin verse with the poetry group, or to make pottery, paint or sculp in the studio."

Others act in the A. W. A. players, make costumes for productions, or learn to direct or write plays. Singers may join the choral group or glee club. A library with 4,000 books is available to members, and open-air galleries, roof-gardens and patio serve fresh air enthusiasts. An emergency hospital and nursing service is maintained in the clubhouse, and there are also gymnasiums, an immense swimming pool, and many other features for the recreation of members.

Perhaps no institution in the country so strikingly illustrates the enterprising spirit of the present-day woman as does this great A. W. A. clubhouse.

HIGHWAY ACCIDENTS ON THE INCREASE

Deaths reaped a red harvest on the highways of California during the first six months of 1931, snuffing out the lives of 1,216 persons during the period in motor mishaps.

The increase in motor deaths for the period was 14 per cent over the first six months of 1930.

Added to the awful toll of death for the period were injuries to 22,614 persons, many so serious that the victims were disabled for life.

These figures are released by the bureau of statistics of the California Highway Patrol with the terse comment that at least 90 per cent of these accidents could have been avoided by careful driving.

A total of 16,509 accidents involving injury or death to one or more persons occurred during the period. There were 25,461 vehicles in all involved, property damage running into thousands of dollars.

The number of persons injured exceeded the same period of 1930 by nearly 4,000.

There were 4,732 pedestrians involved.

The bureau's analysis of causes of these accidents shows conclusively that excessive speed was the main contributing factor in more than 50 per cent of the cases.

"Speed-mad driving continues to dominate our accident situation throughout California," the bureau's report said.

"While conditions and causes are changing so rapidly in the state that no single factor may be blamed for the awful holocaust of deaths, it may be said with safety that the car traveling too fast for the conditions involved is responsible for the biggest share of the accidents.

"California is paying the inevitable penalty of recklessness. Until our people wake up and reform their driving habits, there can be no hope of a reduction."

The month of June of this year was one of the highest months in history with 244 deaths and 4,154 persons injured.

Baseball fans in New York were recently amazed to see a man enter the Yankee stadium wearing a silk hat. A reporter handed an usher a note which read: "Who is the mug in the plug hat?" The usher gave the note to the gentleman in question, who smiled and politely sent the reporter a card with the inscription: "George E. Christie, lord mayor of Halifax."

To make their victim's humiliation complete, Chicago gangsters "took him for a ride" in an Austin.

BUILDERS OF CALIFORNIA

"This is my Estate"

Thousands of people—many with modest incomes—have founded substantial estates upon LIFE INSURANCE. Policies now in force in California exceed five billion dollars.

Seasoned in financial judgment, a life insurance company chooses its bank with as much care as its investments.

One of the world's largest companies transacts business through 60 different Bank of America branches.

And more than 25 other life insurance concerns likewise accumulate and distribute their funds through this Bank's statewide system.

Thus millions that would otherwise remain in transit are made available for increased investments in sound first mortgages and bonds.
